

Community Resource Tool For You and Your Child

AetnaBetterHealth.com/pennsylvania/aunt-bertha

When a parent thinks of their child being healthy, they think of their child not being sick or injured. They may also think having their child take vitamins, go to a doctor for a yearly checkup or taking medications prescribed by their doctor is all that is needed to stay healthy. While these are all important, there is more to consider when trying to get and stay healthy.

You and your child's environment and conditions surrounding where you are born, live, learn, play, and work can impact your health. These conditions are known as Social Determinants of Health (SDoH).

There are different types of SDoH:

Economic Stability

- Being able to afford healthy food, healthcare, and housing for you and your children
- Having access to high quality childcare opportunities so parents can find and keep jobs

Education Access and Quality

- Being able to access a good school or attend college
 - Children have a greater chance of getting a good paying job

Healthcare Access and Quality

- Living close to primary care providers and health care providers who offer services like well childcare and lead screenings
- Getting the education needed to understand your child's healthcare needs

Neighborhood and Built Environment

- Living in a safe neighborhood
- Having access to safe air, water, and no lead exposure

Social and Community Context

- Your child having the support from your family and community
- Children fostering good relationships and not being a victim of bullying peers
